JENNIFER BUSINESS COLLEGE MAKING RAPID STRIDES AT NATIONS CAPITOL.

Jennifer Business College at Washington, D. C., is answering a sore need for young men and women with proficiency in commercial subjects. Beginning just a little over two years ago, in one small room of a music school, it is now a quadrupled in size and is moving rapidly forward to take its place among the foremost business colleges of this country. Products of this institution are locating in various parts of the country, and from most recent reports are reflecting great credit upon themselves and upon their Alma Mater.

Mr. Jennifer, the President and founder of this institution, is highly gratified over the recent progress of the School and the out-look for a bigger future. He feels that the present teaching staff and student equipment and office appliances which the school offers are second to none in the race. He wishes to thank the public in general, his many friends in particular and his colleagues for their loyal support in making the school a success.

The school is now located in the beautiful new building erected by the Southern Aid Society of Virginia at the corner of 7th and T Streets, N. W., Washington, D. C. In connection with the Jennifer Business College, the management operates and controls the Criterion Commercial Service, which renders the public service in typewriting and stenography, stenographic reporting, mimeographing, multigraphing, addressographing, printing, advertising, and their correlated subjects. Besides being valuable asset to the community along business lines, this service affords the students of the Business College the best practical training possible and supplements admirably the theoretical subjects taught.

BLACK BELTS ARE DISINTEGRATING.

Change Due To Migration And Decreasing Birth rate.

Atlanta, Ga., June 29.—The historic Southern "Black Belt" are disintegrating and are destined to pass in a few more generations, according to census studies made by Dr. T. P. Volter, a sociologist of this city. In 1880 there were 300 counties in the South in which the Negro population outnumbered the white. By 1910 the number had shrunk to 264 and in 1920 there were only 218. In 1910 fifty-four counties showed a Negro population of more than three to one. In 1920 only thirty-two counties had a high proportion.

Migration to the North and to the cities and a decreasing birth rate have caused the change. During the last decade the cities gained three quarters of a million in Negro population and the rural districts lost a quarter of a million. The increase in the whole country was only 50,000, or 1-12 per cent, as against eleven, fourteen, seventeen, and twenty-two per cent respectively in the four decades preceding. Meantime the infant death rate among the race continues to be heavy.

HAMPTON INSTITUTE REPORTS PROGRESS.

Principal J. E. Gregg Announces Normal and Agricultural Collegiate Courses. PUBLIC SUPPORTS HAMPTON. Records Show That Education Helps Negroes and Indians Become Race Leaders.

By Wm. Anthony Aery, Hampton, Va., June 29.—Dr. James E. Gregg, principal of Hampton Institute, in his recent report to the board of trustees, of which Chief Justice Taft is the president, stated that the number of students in the boarding department, enrolled to February 1, was 873 (563 boys and 310 girls). The distribution of these students follows: Academy, including preparatory classes: 452; Agricultural School, 28; Business School, 82; Home Economics School, 45; Normal School, 34; and Trade School, 32.

The Veterans' Bureau has sent to Hampton during the year 34 disabled soldiers for "rehabilitation" training. On January 30, 1932, the Hampton board of trustees voted to authorize a four year collegiate normal course, to prepare Negro men and women to qualify as high-school principals and supervisors. The Virginia Department of Education has given its approval, and for the proper completion of his work the degree of Bachelor of Arts in Education will be given.

To meet the demand for trained agricultural leaders for Negro farmers, Hampton Institute now offers a standard four-year collegiate course of thirty-six months, which leads to the degree of Bachelor of Science in Agricultural Education. This development of collegiate instruction, in addition to normal, agricultural, and industrial training was foreseen by Gen. Samuel Chapman Armstrong, who founded Hampton Institute in 1868. "The best argument in justification of these new advanced courses," says Dr. Gregg, is simply that the Institute in one more step is training to the needs of the communities which it is bound to serve; and since the Negro schools of the South are better than they used to be, they demand and deserve more thoroughly trained teachers."

The Academy program of studies, however, lays emphasis on manual training and home making arts. It definitely maintains, says Doctor Gregg, "the variegated yet unified discipline of head, heart and hand which General Armstrong preached and practiced."

The Normal School in addition to four-year college course, offers "a course of two years for the training of high-school teachers; a standard normal course of two years for the training of teachers of elementary schools; and an elementary normal course of one year." Human betterment is the objective of all Hampton courses.

Doctor Gregg reported that the director of the Home Economics School had been granted a leave of absence "to make a Special study of home-economics teaching in the Negro schools under the Federal Board for Vocational Education."

A course in institutional management for schools matrons will be given during the coming Autumn or winter. Instruction in tailoring has been introduced into the advanced home-economics course.

Doctor Gregg in his report recommended the building of a cottage for practice in bookkeeping. The money for this cottage has already been given by Mrs. A. Henry Strong of Rochester, N. Y.

The trades taught at Hampton Institute include automobile mechanics; blacksmithing; bricklaying and plastering; sawmilling; carpentry; machine work; painting; printing; steamfitting and plumbing; tailoring; wheelwrighting and blacksmithing.

The Hampton Institute Trade School last year filled 17,879 orders which were shipped to 16 States; 378 of these were for material furnished to schools for industrial work.

A new advanced builders' course will be offered to graduates of the carpentry and bricklaying courses. The 1931 summer school for colored teachers, held at Hampton, enrolled 637 men and women from 17 States. Virginia furnished 187 and North Carolina, 166.

The Whittier Training School, which is the practice-school for Hampton Institute, has enrolled 492 pupils. The ministers' conference enrollment was 256 from 16 States and 19 denominations; 133 came from rural parishes.

The Y. M. C. A. at Hampton has a membership of 359; the Y. W. C. A. 229.

Last year Hampton was asked to recommit 358 graduates for positions. In the 157 county training schools of the South, Hampton is now furnishing 31 principals, 8 teachers, five of these eleven principals, says Doctor Gregg, "also teach agriculture. Of schools of all sorts there are 75 principals who are Hampton graduates or former students."
